

Seattle Times

Rioting continues outside City Hall

Rioting continued outside of city hall yesterday because of Mayor Jose Quasa's new budget plans for the fiscal year. Nearly 25% of tax earnings have been pulled from Law Enforcement/Lonestar, Park Upkeep/Maintenance, and Small Business relief. This signals possible layoffs in these divisions and the effects are sure to trickle down to the mainstream population.

Where the redirected money is heading remains a mystery to everyone not involved. The only excuse that City Hall is offering is: "The budget has been adjusted to accommodate an upcoming city-wide project to better protect its citizens." The lack of a proper explanation is what originally sparks the current riots in Seattle.

Pensions Cut at Lonestar

Retirement Pensions are scheduled to be slashed 5% today for Lonestar Inc. This hit hard with most retired law enforcement personnel still living in the UCAS. Lonestar's chairman released the boards records leading up to the pension cuts in hopes to prove that they did all they could to prevent them.

She was quoted as saying: "The city's budget cuts have hit Lonestar too hard."

Upper District Mystery Solved

Tina Whitlock was dismissed as a suspect in the disappearance of her father Mason Whitlock III yesterday when a pack of paranormal animals were discovered on the property along with Whitlock's remains. Although the type of animal was not disclosed authorities have assured the public that the infestation was properly taken care of.

